Bryan Pride holds a Masters in Public Policy focusing on Sustainable Development and Agriculture. Currently, Bryan is a Mickey Leland International Hunger Fellow. For his fellowship, Bryan works as the Agriculture and Food Security Advisor for Rise Against Hunger. Prior to Bryan's fellowship, he served as an Agriculture Extension Officer in the U.S Peace Corps in Ghana. Bryan continued his service in Ghana by working on the USAID funded RING project as an Agriculture Technical Advisor. Bryan has designed and implemented agriculture and nutrition programs that have reached more than 3,000 women and participants in Ghana alone. Bryan approaches international development from the mindset that local leaders are the most valuable assets to program design and implementation. His field work experience has led him to develop research focusing on how culture influences both nutrition and food security. Bryan's goal is to reshape how international development agencies approach food security programming.
